Saturday, July 18, 2012 Dorm Life... Yesterday we were in class getting ready for lunch when Michael informed me that everyone was staying in the dorm all weekend long... Oh yeah, I'm not that lame. So we went to class, had lunch, then went back to the dorm and had one of the most fun weekends in our lives. First of all, there is not a bad dorm (maybe the one we were in was kind of bad for us...haha). It is very clean and pretty nice. We have a kitchen, a living room, a dining room, a laundry room, a little study, a computer lab and about 8 dorm rooms. The dorms were nice and quiet so we mostly hung out in the living room. I had a great time and made some great friends, so I can't wait for a long weekend again. Oh, and I also discovered that I can't sleep with a window open (or any noise in the room)...it was a little weird but I could fall asleep the minute I closed the window and then I would never hear anything for the rest of the night... If you ever want to get something done during the night, the only option is to get out of the room or close the door...Q: Suggested edit rejected without any feedback I found this edit to be wrong: but the reviewer decided not to post any of the three reasons for rejection. Could we have a new banner or something? A: It's possible the commenter didn't know about the automatic edit suggestion popup. A: I don't think a new banner is necessary. The rejection message for this suggested edit should have had a link to a review of suggested edits. Even if someone had that link memorized, the edit suggestion popup doesn't seem to be very common knowledge. It looks like every 10 reviews I've seen the reviewer click 'approve', so the popup must only appear once per day or something. To put it mildly, the suggestion was not appropriate.
