The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention on Thursday added the vaping industry to the list of affected parties in its investigation of hundreds of cases of vaping-related illnesses. The new designation means the CDC is working with federal, state and local partners to investigate cases of serious lung illness associated with vaping. The agency said in a release that it is now investigating a total of nearly 300 cases nationwide that are similar to those originally linked to products used by users who reported vaping with cannabis products. Some of those patients have died. ADVERTISEMENT The CDC said earlier Thursday that four deaths were linked to an outbreak in Minnesota. The CDC is now also investigating the deaths of 10 patients nationwide, along with the illnesses in Minnesota. "CDC is working to determine what is causing these cases of lung injury associated with the use of e-cigarettes or other vaping products, as well as identify potential products or chemicals that may be responsible for these cases," the CDC said in the statement. Vaping is a booming business in the United States. Sales of the popular e-cigarette soared to $2.7 billion last year from $396 million in 2014, according to Wells Fargo Securities. Vaping became popular after adult smoking of traditional cigarettes was banned in indoor public places and workplaces, and it was seen as a less-harmful alternative. But in recent years, the number of young people who say they have vaped has also gone up sharply. The CDC on Wednesday warned that teens and young adults are inhaling a "wide array" of potentially harmful substances from the use of electronic cigarettes, including nicotine and nicotine derivatives. 2d92ce491b
