Private sector getting back in 5/7/14 12:05 AM EDT After years of loss and having to fight to be included in budget discussions, the private sector is starting to emerge from its long years of austerity. The result? The country has cut its budget deficit in half, the economy has grown 2.2% in the past year, the unemployment rate is at 7.5%, and the government has not once had to go to the IMF for a bail out. Defying all expectations, the European Commission reports that the economy in the Eurozone expanded 3.1% in the first quarter of 2014, leading to more optimism in the market. To be sure, the recovery is far from a rosy one. The U.S. is still struggling and the ECB is in no hurry to get back into the bond markets. The German economy is still contracting and the euro is still in trouble. But here is the good news: this recovery is due to the private sector. According to the Federal Reserve, as of the first quarter of 2014, the private sector contributed 54.8% of U.S. gross domestic product, or GDP. This is an increase from the 52.8% recorded in the fourth quarter of 2013 and the 50.7% in the third quarter of 2013. The private sector is now contributing more to the U.S. economy than it has in over a decade. The point here is that we are now no longer talking about the government as the one and only engine of economic growth. That has been the prevailing thinking for a long f3e1b3768c
